Why are there multiple entries referring to the same policy?

When a policy states that it covers a journey from, for example, A to B at a premium of x%, that is simply one entry. See for example, the red boxes below.

If a policy states that it covers a journey from A to B or from A to C at a premium of x%, that means that underwriters will accept the risk from A to B at x% but also that they apparently assess the risk from A to C at the same premium. Although it is in the same policy, we have processed these as two entries, as it reflects the assessment of risk in that particular market at that particular time. See the blue boxes for examples.
